

Your privacy & safety, in plain words

A short guide to how Village Voice keeps what you share private and protected.

Village Voice was built for you and your community, and your privacy comes first. What you share here – your stories, your messages and your health notes – belongs to you. Below is a plain explanation of how the platform keeps it safe, and what each protection means for you.

How your information is protected

You sign in with your own private link — no password to remember.

Your access link is unique to you and comes to your own email. There is no password that could be guessed or stolen, and the link is stored only in a scrambled form that cannot be read back.

Your private stories stay private.

When you choose “just for my family,” only the family members you have approved can hear that story. No other resident, and no one else, can reach it – and the platform actively enforces this, not just as a setting.

Your health information is for your eyes only.

Your medicines and your daily medicine record are visible only to you. They are held securely and cannot be seen by other residents or visitors.

The platform checks it really is you — every time.

Whenever the app shows your stories, messages or medicines, it first confirms your identity from your secure sign-in. No one can ask the system for someone else's information.

Other residents never see your personal email.

Inside the village you have your own Village Voice address. Your private email is never shown to other residents or to club organisers.

No adverts. No tracking. Nothing sold.

Village Voice does not show advertisements, does not study your conversations to sell you things, and never sells or shares your information. The platform makes nothing from your data.

Family access is approved, and limited.

Family members must register and be approved before they can see anything — and they only ever see the relative they are linked to.

You are in control of your own recordings.

You can delete any story you have made, at any time, and it is removed.

Your information is encrypted — as it travels, and where it is stored.

Whatever you send is scrambled on its way to us, and it stays encrypted in storage on secure, professionally-managed systems. Your sign-in details are never kept in a form anyone can read.

How your data is stored

Your information is held in an encrypted form using AES-256 encryption – the same standard relied upon by banks and government services. It is kept on professionally-managed infrastructure that is independently certified to recognised international security standards (SOC 2 and ISO 27001).

Access is controlled at every step: information is only ever released once the system has confirmed who is asking, so your records are never handed to anyone but you and the people you have approved.

Your part is simple

Keep your personal sign-in link to yourself, just as you would a letter from your bank. If anything ever looks wrong, or you receive a message you weren't expecting, please tell Colin Hills at colin.hills@voicevillage.co.uk – we would always rather you asked.

No online service can promise to be perfect, but Village Voice is built to protect you, and we work to keep it that way.
